第3問

I'd rather remain satisfied with simply doing what I am good at. There are two reasons. First, once you become famous, you have to listen to the voices of a big audience, some of which do not necessarily match your tastes. As a result, you are occasionally forced to perform in a way you don't like. Second, the more famous you become, the less risk you are likely to take. Thus, your style may become more conservative than attractive. To me, it should be not the public but I myself that call my performance success or failure. (97 words)
